COMPENSATION 101

Compensation supports many critical functions and programs within an organization, and having a general foundation and understanding of compensation is crucial in order to attract and retain valuable employees. By grasping the basics, such as the elements of a pay program, the purpose and link of compensation, the process for market pricing and pay structure design, and many other compensation fundamentals, everyone in the human resources sector can attract and retain valuable employees while helping lead their organizations to success.

ALIGNING PERFORMANCE MANAGEMENT WITH YOUR TOTAL REWARDS STRATEGY

Finding, motivating and keeping top talent is one of the toughest challenges for employers. By understanding the elements of effective performance management and the importance of connecting it with business strategy and financial performance, every organization can make finding and keeping top talent a little easier.

MERIT INCREASES: HOW TO ACCURATELY BUDGET

Employers know that arranging their salary budgets to cover employees' improved performance can be challenging, and increases like merit-based pay are vital. By providing practical tips and strategies, as well as guidance on how to establish salary budgets, various pay options and communication of increases, human resources professionals will learn to retain their highest-quality employees and successfully drive business.

BALANCING GENERATIONAL EXPECTATIONS IN TOTAL REWARDS

Increased globalization, competitiveness, and the top challenge of finding, motivating and keeping talent are why aligning total rewards with each generation's expectations is at the top of many human resource professionals' agendas. With the cost of total rewards often exceeding 40 percent, it is imperative that businesses align their total rewards with generational expectations the best they possibly can.

This presentation covers the five generations in the workforce, their core values and motivations, workplace characteristics, and what they're looking for in compensation and benefits (total rewards). Participants will also create an action plan around what could be done differently with each generation in order to meet their needs and expectations.
